United Fund Aids Epilepsy Society

Many epileptics have been unable to emerge from the recession, according to Dr. Leonora V. Brown of La Jolla, president of the San Diego County Epilepsy Society.

The Society is joining with local chapters throughout the state in the July "Independence for Epileptics" observance.

Dr. Brown appealed for a better and more sympathetic understanding of epilepsy.

"Last year at this time," she said, "we told the public about the effect of the general recession on epileptics. This year we find that although the business slump is over, epileptics are still living in their own private worlds of economic recession. Their economic security is constantly threatened by the difficulty they face in finding and keeping jobs."

Dr. Brown said that several large corporations employing epileptics have found that they are unusually conscientious and their records of performance and safety are excellent.

In spite of this, social workers

Editorial Echoes

There is a disturbing overtone to the hope of Richard E. McArdle, chief of the Forest Service, that the use of national forests for mass recreation will more than double in the next 10 years. National forests certainly should be available for national use, but is a forest still a forest after it has been adapted to mass recreation? Of course, some are almost as domesticated as pastures. Others, however, still are wilderness; and roads, lodges, restaurants, boat dock and gasoline stations—essential to mass recreation—annihilate wilderness. Surely, a bit of it should be preserved, if only for the sake of finding another Burroughs or Muir. The over-running of Yellowstone and the other national parks illustrates the Government's dilemma. Somehow it seemed undemocratic to keep automobiles out of the parks, but once they were thrown open to Americans on wheels some parts of the parks were despoiled of their grandeur. The forest problem might not be quite so difficult if greater efforts were made to save more of our remaining wilderness from commercial exploitation. Then a bit here and there might more readily be preserved for contemplation. (St. Louis Post-Dispatch)

Sextus Julius Frontinus would be impressed. As manager of the Roman aqueduct system around the end of the first century A.D. he knew something about the problem of transporting water over long distances. The 264-mile system of aqueducts under his care delivered 130 million gallons of water daily to the city of Rome, an achievement to which Frontinus understandably pointed with pride. Consequently it is easy to imagine his reaction to the dimensions of the California water project recently passed by the state legislature. For its scale dwarfs anything dreamed of in the Rome of Frontinus, or for that matter, in any other place in any subsequent period.

The plan calls for building the biggest and most expensive dam in the western hemisphere—at Oroville on the Feather River—for the storage of water which will be distributed throughout the state by means of a system of aqueducts and canals totalling more than 1,000 miles. The main aqueduct will transfer water almost 750 miles from Oroville to San Diego county. It will have the capacity to deliver 1.6 billion gallons of water daily to Southern California. Other aqueducts will carry water into both northern and southern San Francisco Bay Area counties and, further south, to San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara. The aqueducts will be tapped, of course, to provide water to the areas through which they run, such as the San Joaquin Valley, where irrigation demands are particularly high. At present it is anticipated that the total cost of the project will amount to almost $2 billion, with $450 million of that going for the giant Oroville dam . . .

It would be premature, however, to conclude that the State has finally solved its water problem by the passage of the recent legislation. The initial project must be approved by the people of the State at the polls in November of next year, and a heated controversy can be expected.

Come what may, however, the water legislation is a giant step toward the solution of California's water problem. Sextus Julius Frontinus would be right to be impressed.

SCIENCE

Why are sharks appearing in California coastal waters formerly shunned by the killer fishes as too chilly?

Why are glaciers retreating, and the incidence of icebergs in northern Atlantic waters increasing?

Why did Hawaii experience, two years ago, its first tropical hurricane in recorded history?

These evidences of warmer ocean water temperatures may be forerunners of "a natural disaster unprecedented in civilized times," if the theories of many leading meteorologists and climatologists prove correct.

A Warmer World

Writing in a recent issue of U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings, Philip B. Yeager, Staff Consultant of the House Committee on Astronautics and Space Exploration, reports that the U. S. Weather Bureau has embarked on a world-wide research project to test current scientific speculation that the earth is gradually getting hotter from the increase of carbon dioxide in the air—an increase due to the heavy use of fuel energy that began with the industrial revolution in 1800 and has continued at an ever accelerating rate.

If the trend continues, "the ice caps on the poles will begin to melt and the amount of water on the earth will increase," states University of California's famed physicist Dr. Edward Teller. "Such places as New York and Holland would be inundated."

Other results would be the transformation of fertile valleys to arid wastes and temperate zones into tropical, the dislocation of populations as land masses shrank, and shifts in world power due to the far greater damage to water-bordered countries than to inland powers.

Trouble Ahead

The temperature rise necessary to produce coastal flooding "would not have to be very great in absolute terms," according to Mr. Yeager. "Two or three degrees centigrade over several centuries might raise ocean levels anywhere from fifty to a hundred feet. A higher temperature rise would do the same thing in less time." And some scientists believe the "beginning date of danger" is as imminent as the late 1970's.

Hamburger-onion grill is a moment's-notice treat if canned hamburgers are on your pantry shelf. Heating-through is all they need, as they're pre-seasoned and precooked. M-m-m-m-m!

BY DOROTHY MADDOX

An outdoor hamburger-onion grill will make a hit with everyone. It's strictly a pick-up-and-go affair. The hamburgers are the canned variety, which you can keep on hand year around. Quality branded canned hamburgers are well seasoned and precooked. They need only to be heated through.

Use a folding grill. Place onion slices on the grill, then top with hamburger patties. Heat the hamburgers next to the hot coals for about five minutes, so that onion juices will drop through the meat.

Then flip the grill over and cook until onion is brown. Have buns with tomato slices ready for the duo, and lots of regular picnic trimmings.

Tossed Corn Beef-and-Sauerkraut Salad (4 servings)

One 1-pound can sauerkraut, 1 cup diced, canned or cooked corned beef; 4 cups torn lettuce, 1/2 cup French dressing, salt and pepper.

Combine kraut, beef and lettuce. Toss lightly and chill. Add remaining ingredients; toss lightly but thoroughly. Garnish with additional corned beef.

Kraut-Ham-Egg Salad (6 servings)

Two 1-pound cans sauerkraut,

1/4 cup finely chopped onion, 1/4 pound boiled ham, cut in thin strips; 2 hard-cooked eggs, chopped; 1/2 cup salad oil, 2 tablespoons vinegar, 1 teaspoon dry mustard, 2 teaspoons sugar, salt and pepper.

Drain kraut; reserve 1/2 cup kraut juice. Combine kraut, onion, ham and eggs. Toss lightly and chill.

Combine kraut juice and remaining ingredients; beat or shake until well blended.

Add dressing to kraut mixture. Toss lightly but thoroughly. If desired, garnish with egg slices and ham strips.

This is something truly different to serve family and friends.

in Epilepsy Society chapters throughout the state report many calls from epileptics who lost their jobs when their nervous disorder became known.

Epilepsy is a nervous disorder affecting one out of every 100 people in the United States. In California alone there are nearly 150,000 epileptics, and while four out of five can be helped with medical care, only about one in five is receiving adequate treatment because of fear of exposure keeps most of them from seeking help, Dr. Brown said.

Department of Employment records also show that epileptics face an almost hopeless situation in finding employment if their affliction is known.

Dr. Brown said one of the major jobs of the Epilepsy Society is to overcome through education, the stigma attached to this nervous disorder.

The Epilepsy Society is one of the almost 100 health and welfare agencies supported through the annual fall United Fund drive. It does not conduct a separate fund-raising campaign of its own.

TEEN TALK

By Janie

Everyone who attended the Pilgrim Fellowship skating party Friday night had a jolly time despite the fact that there were quite a few of the members missing.

The movie, "Rebel Without A Cause" featured at the Alpine Ramblers Teenage Club meeting Saturday night, should be very good. As if Sal Mineo isn't enough of an attraction, it's in technicolor yet! The cost is only 30c. All kids are welcome.

Next Sunday night will be the last meeting of the Junior and Senior Pilgrim Fellowship groups of Alpine Community Church until next September. Hope the group will be even larger then than it is now.

All of Alpine's 4-H Clubs are also coming to a close for the summer. Four-H members are checking and rechecking their record books, counting their ribbons, and storing their 4-H caps until September when the clubs will again resume their work.
